INDIVIDUAL MISSION PROFILE

The Aerial Combat Mission Plan

On arrival at the $3 million adventure squadron, you or your group will enter the world of combat aviation. After meeting with your instructor and the Fighter Combat International team, you will don your flight suit, review flight equipment and study cockpit safety. Then it's time for the flight briefing, where you'll engage in the fierce study of aerial combat concepts, skills and tactical employment.

With the briefing items complete - it's flight time. After strapping into the front cockpit of the Extra 300L, preflight safety checks are completed. Within minutes you're airborne! You'll fly in close formation with your competitor at speeds reaching 250 miles per hour, carrying out a weapon system run-through and "warm-up" maneuvers to familiarize yourself with the aircraft. Now you're ready for action.

The Mission

A one-on-one battle against your opponent begins, with multiple engagements. The aircraft has dual controls; you fly the aircraft under the guidance of the Fighter Combat instructor. With the simulated sound of gunfire in the cockpit and smoke billowing from the enemy aircraft, you victory-roll away from your first successful dogfight.

Participants will see a close formation takeoff, precision formation flight-maneuvers demonstration and a formation return for landing (subject to aircraft availability).

The Debriefing

Back at the squadron, the instructors re-create the mission for you and your competitor, using the multiple-view cockpit video, and combat results, complete with tactical "lessons learned" that can be applied during your next mission.

About the Fighter Combat International Pilots
